Careers in Sport

With the Rio Olympics on, we should explore what opportunities there are for Careers in Sport, Fitness and Recreation.

The sports industry can be VERY competitive to get into. Often there are many more applicants and graduates trying to enter into the industry than there are jobs. Most people think first of athletes and coaches, but there are also referees, umpires, broadcasters, marketing specialists, agents, equipment managers, dieticians, sports psychologists, trainers and many more positions. Sport is a business that needs managers, accountants and statisticians. Educational advantage will often open the door to sports positions. Getting a qualification that can provide you with transferable skills that will be of value in other industries can be sensible, just in case you don't succeed in getting the dream job straight away. For instance, if you want to be in sports PR, get a degree in Journalism or Communications and Media. If you want to be a sports agent, a master's degree in sports management and a Commerce /Business degree would be of value. Sometimes landing the dream job will require long term vision and planning and perhaps some compromise using other jobs to develop the skills, experience and knowledge that will make you more competitive in landing the 'perfect job'.

There are heaps of courses available through most universities that will provide the opportunity to gain important qualifications that will be recognised by most employers, however there are a few websites you can explore to learn more specifically about careers in sport, fitness and leisure.
